Don't be scared to write professional even if you're just starting out. In this sense, professional means that you're trying to make money therefore it's not on a hobby level. However, be sure that you can do the job on the level that's required.

Sometimes specifying where you are based at the moment could be important, it might send a positive message to the client. Being familiar with more than one country is intriguing. (For example, you were raised and born in Slovakia but now you live in the

This should be about something very closely related to the give project. For example, if it's a project for an SaaS company, you can write that you specialize in creating small ads and VSL for SaaS product. Or if you're a software developer applying to a job about building an IOS app, write that you specialize in building apps for IOS. (Don't forget that you need to have references in all cases, and you have to be good! The only thing you can fake is that you might not actually specialize in a certain area, you just work in it.

About this don't lie. You can include the years where you did it only on a hobby level (not making money) especially if you're just starting out, but don't say that you have 10+ years of experience if your first time ever was only 3 years ago.
For example, in my case I've been making videos for 13 years of which I've worked professionally 7,

If you have not completed any courses whatsoever, write something about the background of your knowledge. For example, you can be a self-taught software developer, then write how you learned to become one, what program languages you know. If you want to do UGC jobs but you haven't done any studies that is

You have the option to attach files up to 25MB. If you have a CV, or small files you can use this options, otherwise use links. Now, make sure to give them at least one specific piece of reference with a direct link. Don't just send them a pool of projects that they have to go through. You can send that as well as proof of experience, but tailor one link at least to the given project.

In some cases they will ask you to state your fee. Write what you feel like a fair amount, but be open to negotiate. If the project pricing is set to hourly, you can write that you prefer flat fees as it's a more transparent way of working.
